La Crescent Abbey The site of interest La Crescent Abbey, overlooking the Seine, is one of the most imposing religious buildings in Paris, next to the Basilica of Sainte-Chapelle and the church of Montmartre. This abbey was founded by Count Baldwin IX of Flanders and his wife Mathilda (died 1048) in 1047, though the abbey itself is much older. It was built in Romanesque style, with its twin towers facing the Seine. It was destroyed by the English in January 1087 and was rebuilt, as one can see from the masonry. The first abbots of La Crescent were German: Anno, Rolfo, Hildebald and Anno. Hildebald died on 2 May 1017 and was succeeded by Ado in 1018, who was also abbot of St. Maurice. At the end of 1031, Bernard and Lambert were in charge. Bernard was born in 1009. Lambert was born in 1008. Bernard and Lambert were abbots of Saint-Maurice-des-Fossés, which led to conflicts with the local population and a fight with King Henry I. In 1053, Lambert was succeeded by Willaard. In 1091 Willaard, along with Ado, Bernard and Lambert, was imprisoned by Berengar of Antwerp, who wished to obtain the abbey, though the abbot Ado escaped. In 1095, the abbot Ado was freed, but the abbey was again occupied by Berengar. The abbey was recaptured by Hugh III the Great, count of Paris, who hired French troops. This time the abbey was destroyed. The buildings were rebuilt in the 12th century, though not as tall. The chancel and upper part of the nave were rebuilt in the 13th and 14th centuries. The upper part of the chapel also dates back to the 12th century. The towers were built in the 15th century. The abbey was restored in the 19th century.
